

Clay Smith is a financial analyst at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL) and has served as member of the Board of Directors for UNCLE Credit Union since first being elected in 2018.

At LLNL, Clay serves as a financial analyst within the Budget Office. In this role he manages the internal burden rate structure and works with management and internal stakeholders for various funding types at LLNL.

Clay has a BS in Business Administration with a concentration in Finance from University of the Pacific's Eberhardt School of Business. During his final year of college, he was involved in the Student Investment Fund, managing approximately $2.8 million as part of the school's endowment. He researched the technology and utilities sectors for the fund, made stock recommendations, and wrote several reports on the sectors he covered. He held a leadership role as Chief Investment Officer with responsibility for overall investment policy and fund operations.

Clay considers Livermore his hometown, being raised and educated there, and recently moved back after living in Walnut Creek. He is a member of Asbury United Methodist Church and has volunteered his time there helping with various programs and activities.

Clay has always had an interest in all things financial, exhibited by his current job and academic pursuits. Clay believes his experience as a financial analyst and managing his college's investment fund will enable him to successfully fulfill his role as a Director on the UNCLE Credit Union Board, where he can share his perspective as an early career professional in the Bay Area.
